

The Pasteur Institute facing the Palestinian genocide

For an ethical and humanistic science

Partnerships with collaborating institutes...

THAT'S ENOUGH

Do you think that the IP should break off its partnerships with institutes and/or countries that do not respect international law and human rights?

Do you think that the money raised or produced by IP research should only finance (directly or indirectly) projects that are compatible with the humanistic commitments of IP?

The Institut Pasteur officially supports the United Nations Global Compact and its 10 principles relating to human rights, labor rights, environmental protection and the fight against corruption. It also adheres to the Paris Climate Action Charter of the city of Paris. Finally, he strives to "act constantly in the public interest, to pursue the universal, generous and humanistic character of the missions of Louis Pasteur" and "in favor of diversity, equity and inclusion."

The IP's statutes require it to "cooperate with any organization or administration following a similar purpose" (research, education, public health and knowledge transfer in the biomedical field).

The IP has broken all ties with Russian institutions, the Pasteur Institute in Shanghai, the Chinese Academy of Sciences, and Iranian institutions (including the Tehran IP).

The Institut Pasteur has chosen NOT to brake its ties with Israeli scientific institutions. This is despite the recognition by the UN, many NGOs (and demonstration of Pasteurians), acts of genocide, ethnic cleansing, numerous war crimes (in Palestine, Lebanon, Iran...), and invasions (of Palestine, Lebanon & Syria) [cf. UN reports: A/79/384 and A/80/492]; and in spite of active support to the Israeli army from Israel's scientific institutions [cf. "Towers of Ivory and Steel", Maya Wind].

The BNP (bank and partner of the IP) invests heavily in fossil fuels and weapons. It has also financed the Israeli state to the tune of several billion and invests in many companies involved in the colonization of Jordan.

Our general manager, Yasmine Belkaid, chose to take a stand against the Rassemblement National and the rise of fascism in an opinion piece published on July 4, 2024, in the newspaper Le Monde: "It is [the duty of the Pasteur Institute] to take action when our nation's constitutive values and the founding principles of the republican pact are threatened." We would like to congratulate this initiative with which we are in total agreement. As the presidential elections approach and the threat—greater than ever—of the RN's rise to power, we call on you, Madam Director, to renew this stance.
